Re: United States v. Ho Wan Kwok, Kin Ming Je, and Yanping Wang, S1 23 Cr. 118 (AT)

Dear Judge Torres:

The Government respectfully submits this letter, outlining the relevant legal framework under the Classified Information Procedures Act (“CIPA”), 18 U.S.C. app. 3. This letter provides a summary of (1) CIPA’s statutory framework as it pertains to pretrial filings and (2) the different types of CIPA motions that may be filed in this case.

At the June 6, 2023 conference, the Government hopes to set a schedule for the Government’s filing of a motion pursuant to Section 4 of CIPA—which the Government proposes to file on an ex parte basis under seal—seeking to withhold from discovery, substitute, and/or summarize certain classified information. Section 4 and other provisions of CIPA, and the applicable legal standards governing CIPA motions, are discussed in further detail below.

Overview of the CIPA Statutory Framework

CIPA governs the discovery of classified information in federal criminal cases. See United States v. Abu-Jihaad, 630 F.3d 102, 140-41 (2d Cir. 2010). Congress enacted CIPA to enable the Government to fulfill its duty to protect national security information, while simultaneously complying with its discovery obligations in federal criminal prosecutions. See S. Rep. No. 96-823, 96th Cong., 2d Sess., at 3 (1980), reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4294, 4296; see also United States v. Pappas, 94 F.3d 795, 799 (2d Cir. 1996) (stating that CIPA’s fundamental purpose is to “harmonize a defendant’s right to obtain and present exculpatory material upon his trial and the government’s right to protect classified material in the national interest.” (quoting United States v. Wilson, 571 F. Supp. 1422, 1426 (S.D.N.Y. 1983))); see also, e.g., United States v. Apperson, 441 F.3d 1162, 1193 n.8 (10th Cir. 2006) (noting that CIPA “evidence[s] Congress’s intent to prevent classified information from unnecessary disclosure at any stage of a criminal trial,” while simultaneously ensuring that a defendant’s right to present a defense is not compromised).

CIPA does not alter the defendant’s substantive rights or the Government’s discovery obligations. See United States v. Anderson, 872 F.2d 1508, 1514 (11th Cir. 1989) (collecting cases). Rather, CIPA creates a procedural framework that permits the Court to rule, before trial, on questions related to classified materials. This framework helps to prevent unnecessary or inadvertent disclosure of classified information, and allows the Government to assess the national security “costs” associated with pursuing a certain course in its criminal prosecution. See, e.g., Anderson, 872 F.2d at 1514; United States v. Collins, 720 F.2d 1195, 1197 (11th Cir. 1983); United States v. Lopez-Lima, 738 F. Supp. 1404, 1407 (S.D. Fla. 1990).

An overview of certain potentially relevant CIPA provisions follows:

Section 2: Pretrial Conference

Section 2 of CIPA provides that the Court may hold a conference at any time after an indictment has been filed to consider matters relating to classified information. See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 2. A court may elect to hold a Section 2 conference with both parties, or ex parte with either the Government or the defense, to address classified matters. See United States v. Abu-Jihaad, No. 07 Cr. 57 (MRK), 2007 WL 2972623, at *1 (D. Conn. Oct. 11, 2007) (collecting cases in which “numerous courts have upheld the propriety of ex parte, in camera proceedings in cases involving classified information”).

Section 3: General Protective Order

Section 3 of CIPA provides for an appropriate protective order to be entered to protect against the unauthorized dissemination of classified information disclosed to the defense in connection with the prosecution. See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 3.

Section 4: Discovery and Protective Orders

Section 4 of CIPA outlines the procedures to be followed when the Government seeks to limit the information it is providing to the defense in the context of the discovery process. Among its provisions, CIPA authorizes a court to deny or modify discovery of classified information that ordinarily would be produced pursuant to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 16 or otherwise. Specifically, Section 4 of CIPA provides that “upon a sufficient showing,” a court may “authorize the United States to delete specified items of classified information from [discovery], . . . to substitute a summary of the information for such classified documents, or to substitute a statement admitting relevant facts that the classified information would tend to prove.” 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 4. This provision “clarifies district courts’ powers under Rule 16(d)(1) to issue protective orders denying or restricting discovery for good cause, which includes information vital to the national security.” United States v. Stewart, 590 F.3d 93, 130 (2d Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(d)(1) (district courts may “for good cause, deny . . . discovery or inspection, or grant other appropriate relief”).

The Second Circuit has explained that, in analyzing a Section 4 motion, a district court should engage in a three-stage analysis. See United States v. Aref, 533 F.3d 72, 78 (2d Cir. 2008). First, the Court must determine whether the classified information at issue is discoverable. See id. at 80. Second, the Court should assess whether the Government has properly invoked the need to protect against the disclosure of classified information, which the Second Circuit determined is sourced in the common-law privilege against the disclosure of state secrets. See id. at 78. The Second Circuit explained that the state secrets “privilege ‘allows the government to withhold information from discovery when disclosure would be inimical to national security.’” Id. at 78-79 (quoting Zuckerbraun v. Gen. Dynamics Corp., 935 F.2d 544, 546 (2d Cir. 1991)). That privilege, the Aref court observed, can only be invoked by the “head of the department which has control over the matter, after actual personal consideration by that officer.” Id. at 80 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted); see United States v. Zubaydah, 142 S. Ct. 959, 967 (2022). As a consequence, in cases in this Circuit involving the equities of the Department of Justice in classified information, any such claim of privilege must personally be asserted by the Attorney General, typically in the form of a declaration.

The third stage in the above-described analysis is the Court’s determination of whether, if it has been invoked, the Government’s common-law privilege must give way. See Aref, 533 F.3d at 80. This includes consideration of whether the classified material that the Government proposes to delete from discovery (or to produce in summary form) is both “relevant and helpful” to the defense. See id. at 79-80. The “relevant and helpful” standard was first articulated by the Supreme Court in United States v. Roviato, 353 U.S. 53 (1957), a case that concerned the privilege that permits the Government, in certain circumstances, to withhold the identity of its informants.

Section 5: Notice from a Defendant

Pursuant to Section 5 of CIPA, a defendant who reasonably expects to disclose (or cause the disclosure of) classified information at any stage of a prosecution is required to file notice of such intention. See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 5(a). Such information might include classified information that the defense has learned through the discovery process, or classified information that is known to the defendant himself. The Section 5 notice must “include a brief description of the classified information,” id., and “must be particularized, setting forth specifically the classified information which the defendant reasonably believes to be necessary to his defense.” Collins, 720 F.2d at 1199. A defendant must provide any Section 5 notice “within the time specified by the court or, where no time is specified, within thirty days prior to trial.” 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 5(a).

If the defendant fails to provide a timely and adequately detailed notice sufficiently in advance of trial to permit the implementation of CIPA procedures, Section 5(b) provides for preclusion. See United States v. Badia, 827 F.2d 1458, 1465 (11th Cir. 1987). Similarly, if the defense attempts to disclose at trial classified information which is not described in their Section 5(a) notice, preclusion is the appropriate remedy prescribed by Section 5(b). See United States v. Smith, 780 F.2d 1102, 1105 (4th Cir. 1985) (“A defendant is forbidden from disclosing any such information absent the giving of notice.”).

In this case, the Government believes it is possible that it may disclose classified information to cleared counsel for both defendants, Ho Wan Kwok and Yanping Wang.

Section 6: Hearings and Substitutions

If the defense gives Section 5 notice of intention to disclose (or cause the disclosure of) classified information, the Government may request the Court to conduct a hearing to make determinations as to the use, relevance, or admissibility of the classified information at trial or a pretrial proceeding. 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 6(a). Section 6 also requires that the Court hold any such hearing in camera “if the Attorney General certifies to the Court in such petition that a public proceeding may result in the disclosure of classified information.” Id. At the hearing, the defense must proffer why the classified information that they seek to disclose is relevant, while the Government is given an opportunity to challenge the request on various grounds—including, for example, the materiality and admissibility of the proposed information. See, e.g., United States v.

Cardoen, 898 F. Supp. 1563, 1581 (S.D. Fla. 1995); United States v. Rezaq, 899 F. Supp. 697, 704 (D.D.C. 1995).

If the Court grants a defendant's request to disclose classified information, the Government may then seek Court approval for alternative means of disclosure—including an unclassified statement admitting the facts contained in the classified materials, or an unclassified summary of the facts contained in the classified materials. See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 6(c)(l). CIPA directs that the Court shall grant such an application from the Government if the Court “finds that the statement or summary will provide the defendant with substantially the same ability to make his defense as would disclosure of the specific classified information.” Id.

If the classified information cannot be disclosed in a manner that provides the “defendant with substantially the same ability to make his defense” as would disclosure of the classified information, 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 6(c), and the Government is unwilling to disclose such information, then the Court may take appropriate action, including making a finding against the Government on any issue as to which the classified information is probative, striking testimony, barring the use of certain testimony or even dismissing the indictment. 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 6(e).

Section 7: Interlocutory Appeals

CIPA Section 7 gives the Government the right to pursue an interlocutory appeal of an adverse CIPA decision. See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 7.

CIPA Section 4 Filings Are Properly Made Ex Parte and In Camera

CIPA expressly authorizes Section 4 filings to be made ex parte, in camera, as the Government proposes to do here. See 18 U.S.C. app. 3 § 4 (“The court may permit the United States to make a [Section 4] request . . . in the form of a written statement to be inspected by the court alone.”). Congress viewed the ex parte nature of a Section 4 proceeding as important. As the record of the House of Representatives put it, “since the government is seeking to withhold classified information from the defendant, an adversary hearing with defense knowledge would defeat the very purpose of the discovery rules.” H.R. Rep. No. 96-831, pt. 1, at 27 n.22 (1980); see also Fed. R. Crim. P. 16 Advisory Committee Notes, 1966 Amendments, Subdivision (e) (“[I]t would defeat the purpose of the protective order if the government were required to make its showing in open court. The problem arises in its most extreme form where matters of national security are involved.”).¹

Proceeding ex parte and in camera makes sense in light of CIPA's purpose. First, the Government makes a motion pursuant to Section 4 to delete or summarize certain materials so that it will not need to reveal those materials. If the Government's motion to delete or summarize were not reviewed in camera and ex parte, the motion practice would itself reveal the very information—and commonly, the sensitive technique or techniques used to obtain that information—that the Government seeks ultimately to shield in the interest of national security. See, e.g., Aref, 533 F.3d at 81 (“When the government is seeking to withhold classified information from the defendant, an adversary hearing with defense knowledge would defeat the very purpose of the discovery rules.” (internal quotation marks omitted)); United States v. Campa, 529 F.3d 980, 995 (11th Cir. 2008) (“The right that section four confers on the government would be illusory if defense counsel were allowed to participate in section four proceedings because defense counsel would be able to see the information that the government asks the district court to keep from defense counsel’s view.”); United States v. Klimavicius-Viloria, 144 F.3d 1249, 1261 (9th Cir. 1998) (“The legislative history of [CIPA] explains that because the government is seeking to withhold classified information from the defendant, an adversary hearing with defense knowledge would defeat the very purpose of the discovery rule.”).

Second, CIPA Section 4 motions concern the question of what the Government will turn over during the discovery process. Such questions are usually answered solely by Government attorneys with no Court involvement. When the Government moves for the Court to become involved in assessing whether certain materials must be produced, it is entirely routine for that judicial assessment to be handled ex parte, in camera. As the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has noted, ex parte CIPA practice is “close[ly] analog[ous]” to more familiar ex parte practices:

When a court (rather than the prosecutor alone, as is ordinarily the case) reviews evidence in camera to determine whether it constitutes a witness statement subject to disclosure under the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500(b), or exculpatory material subject to disclosure under Brady, the defendant is likewise not entitled to access to any of the evidence reviewed by the court . . . to assist in his argument that it should be disclosed.

United States v. Mejia, 448 F.3d 436, 458 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

In accordance with the foregoing principles, courts in this Circuit and elsewhere routinely permit the Government to make Section 4 filings ex parte and in camera, regardless of whether one or more defense counsel has or could obtain an appropriate security clearance. See, e.g., Abu-Jihaad, 630 F.3d at 143 (rejecting argument that Government’s ex parte and in camera submissions were improper (citing Aref, 533 F.3d at 81)); Abu-Jihaad, 2007 WL 2972623, at *1 (collecting numerous cases), aff’d, Abu-Jihaad, 630 F.3d 102; United States v. Liu, No. 19 Cr. 804 (VEC), 2021 WL 3374535, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 3, 2021) (noting that ex parte consideration was appropriate and that an argument to the contrary “is foreclosed by CIPA itself and has been rejected repeatedly by the Second Circuit and other courts to consider the issue”); United States v. Saipov, No. 17 Cr. 722 (VSB) (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2019), ECF No. 212 (“Courts routinely permit the Government to proceed ex parte when the substance of the classified information that the Government seeks to [] with[o]ld from discovery is explicitly discussed in the relevant motion.”) (collecting cases); accord Opinion & Order, Alimehmeti, ECF No. 54, May 8, 2017 (denying defense motion for access to Government’s ex parte Section 4 motion); Order, United States v. Ashe, No. 15 Cr. 706 (VSB) (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 2016), ECF No. 272 (same); Transcript, United States v. Jones, No. 16 Cr. 19 (PGG) (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 16, 2016), ECF No. 30 (same); Memorandum Decision and Order, United States v. Mostafa, No. 04 Cr. 356 (KBF) (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 17, 2014), ECF No. 233 (same); United States v. Ahmad, Nos. 04 Cr. 301 (JCH), 06 Cr. 194 (JCH), 2013 WL 1899792, at *3 (D. Conn. May 1, 2013) (“Because the court finds that, in accordance with section 4, the classified information is not discoverable, a clearance would not have entitled the defense to see any of the information.” (internal quotation marks omitted)); United States v. Ahmed, No. 10 Cr. 131 (PKC), 2011 WL 4915005, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 23, 2011) (ruling, over objection of cleared defense counsel, that ex parte, in camera consideration of the Government’s Section 4 motion was proper); Abu-Jihaad, 2007 WL 2972623, at *2 (holding that a Section 4 motion can be made ex parte and noting that “[i]f . . . the Court decides that the information is not discoverable at all, Defendant is not entitled to production of the information, regardless whether his counsel is willing to submit to security clearance procedures”); United States v. Libby, 429 F. Supp. 2d 18, 25 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (permitting the Government to file ex parte Section 4 motions—even though the defendant and his counsel held appropriate security clearances—upon a showing in the Government’s filing that the defense did not have the requisite “need-to-know”).

The Government’s Section 4 Motion

For the reasons set out above, and in line with the uniform practice of courts in this District, the Government requests to file its Section 4 motion on an ex parte basis when such motion is due, and for the Court to review that motion in camera and maintain it under seal.

Should the Court have any further questions about the anticipated scope or substance of the Government’s Section 4 motion, the Government requests that the Court and the Government proceed to an ex parte Section 2 pretrial conference.

Respectfully submitted,
